Cybersecurity Themes Entering Q4

Cybersecurity at an Inflection Point

The first half of 2026 confirmed what many expected but few fully appreciated: cybersecurity has entered its next consolidation cycle.

Artificial intelligence is no longer simply creating new attack surfaces—it is reshaping how security products are built, how enterprises evaluate technology, and how strategic acquirers deploy capital. Across nearly every segment, vendors are racing to build comprehensive platforms, with buyers increasingly acquiring AI capabilities and Security Services rather than developing them internally.

This evolution is reshaping capital allocation just as rapidly as it is reshaping technology. Strategic acquirers are placing greater emphasis on Security Services as AI-driven adoption accelerates demand for implementation, managed detection and response, and specialized expertise. The result has been an exceptionally active first half of 2026, with acquisitions accelerating across AI Security, Security Services, and Risk & Compliance. More importantly, today's transactions are increasingly driven by long-term platform strategy and market positioning rather than opportunistic product expansion.

Looking Toward Q4

As we enter the second half of 2026, several themes are beginning to take shape.

After a relatively quiet start to the year for billion-dollar acquisitions, we expect the pace of mega-deals to remain measured. Instead, strategic buyers are likely to continue prioritizing smaller, capability-driven acquisitions that strengthen existing platforms, particularly in AI Security, Security Services, and other high-growth segments where product gaps remain.

Public cybersecurity companies are balancing disciplined capital allocation with increasing pressure to expand their AI capabilities, creating continued demand for targeted acquisitions that accelerate product roadmaps and enhance competitive positioning.

Capital markets reflect a similar dynamic. While funding remains readily available for high-quality companies, investors have become increasingly selective. Rather than rewarding broad AI narratives, capital is flowing toward businesses demonstrating strong customer adoption, differentiated technology, and a credible path toward becoming category leaders—or attractive strategic acquisition targets.

Over the first half of 2026, one theme became increasingly difficult to ignore: cybersecurity is no longer evolving one category at a time. Instead, the market is converging around broader platforms that integrate identity, data security, cloud infrastructure, security operations, and emerging technologies into unified solutions.

As I analyzed this year's transactions, a clear pattern emerged. Strategic acquisitions are becoming less about adding incremental features and more about building comprehensive platforms that address a wider range of enterprise security needs. Buyers are looking beyond today's product gaps and investing in technologies that strengthen their long-term competitive positioning and expand their platform capabilities.

Looking toward the remainder of 2026, I expect this trend to continue. Large strategic acquirers will likely remain active where meaningful technology gaps exist, while private equity firms continue to pursue scaled software businesses with durable recurring revenue and opportunities for platform expansion. Venture investors also appear to be concentrating capital behind companies with differentiated technology, measurable customer traction, and clear strategic relevance, regardless of the specific segment in which they operate.

The first half of 2026 suggests that the cybersecurity market has entered a new phase. Rather than asking where AI fits within cybersecurity, buyers and investors are evaluating how emerging technologies, evolving threats, and changing customer demands are reshaping the industry. I believe these dynamics will define investment banking activity through the remainder of the year, continuing to drive consolidation as the industry's leading platforms compete to expand their capabilities and strengthen their long-term market positions.

II. Executive Summary

Momentum RESEARCH

A look at 2026

M&A Activity
The first half of 2026 remained one of the most active periods on record as strategic acquirers continued to prioritize Security Services, AI Security, and R&C capabilities. Security Services saw 82 M&A transactions in H1.

M&A activity reflected a continued shift toward platform expansion, with buyers acquiring technologies that strengthen AI-native product portfolios rather than adding incremental features. AI Security, R&C, and Security Services remained among the most active areas for strategic acquisitions.

While mega-deals were less prevalent than in 2025, transaction activity remained broad across the market, highlighting continued demand for differentiated cybersecurity assets and reinforcing buyers' confidence heading into the second half of the year.

Financing Activity
Early-Stage investing remains the most common in 2026, with 404 Early-Stage financing rounds projected by year-end. The total financing by year-end is expected to reach 766 transactions, with only 383 taking place thus far in H1

The AI traction continues with 79 transactions in H1. Additionally, Security Services is the new hot sector with 84 funding rounds completed in H1. As mentioned in the Security Services report, AI Security is driving the need for Security Services as demand for service platforms with AI in threat detection and SOC automation increases.

II. 2026 Highlights

Momentum RESEARCH

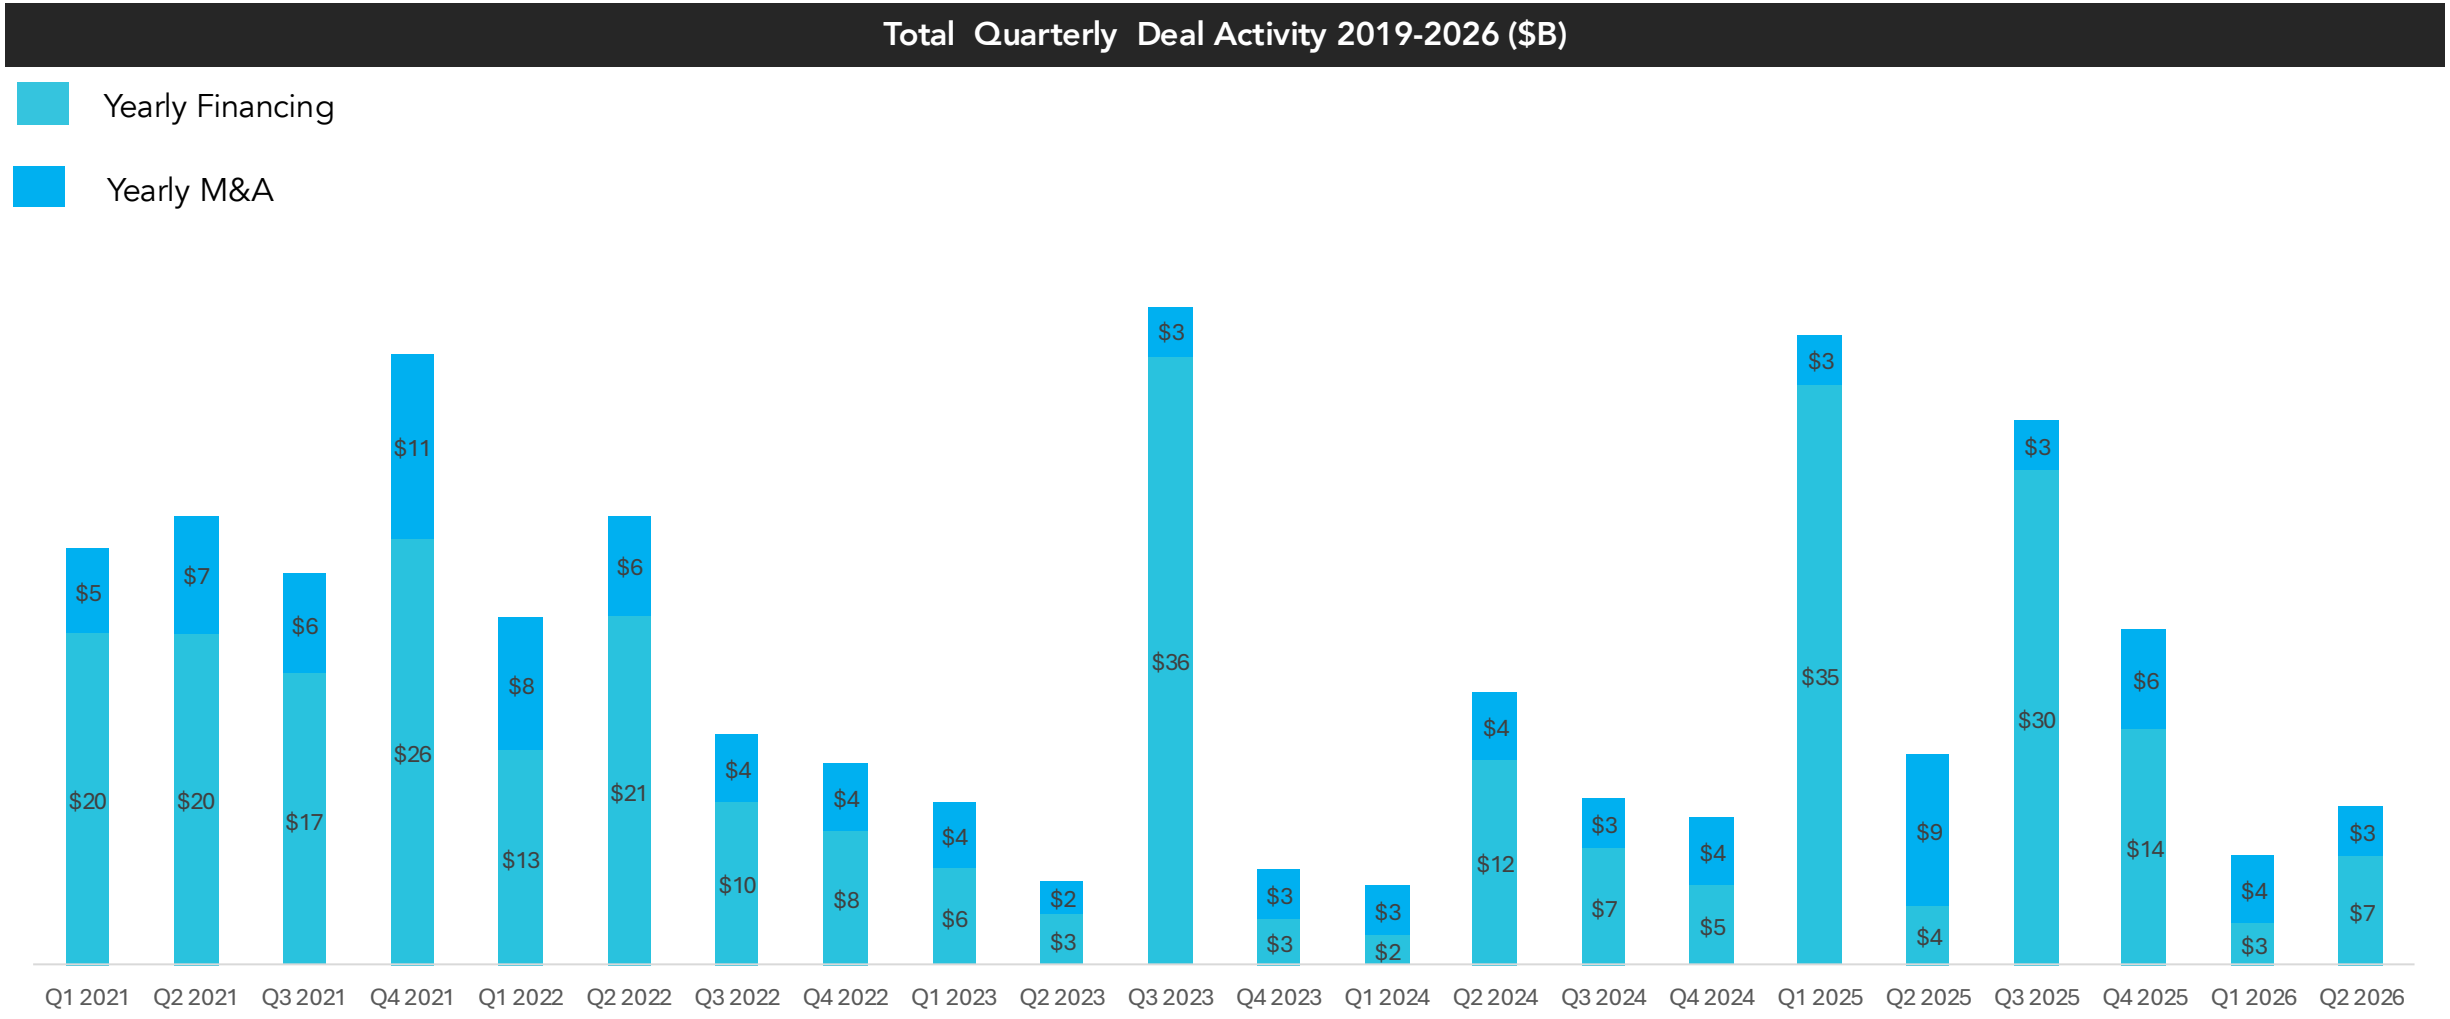

Total Deal Activity Last 7 Years

At first glance, 2026 appears to be a slower year for cybersecurity M&A and financing compared to 2025 and the record-setting activity of 2021. However, this is largely a function of fewer blockbuster transactions rather than weakening market fundamentals.

Financing activity has remained on a steady trajectory throughout the year, while M&A has shifted toward a higher volume of smaller strategic acquisitions, reducing aggregate deal value despite continued transaction activity.

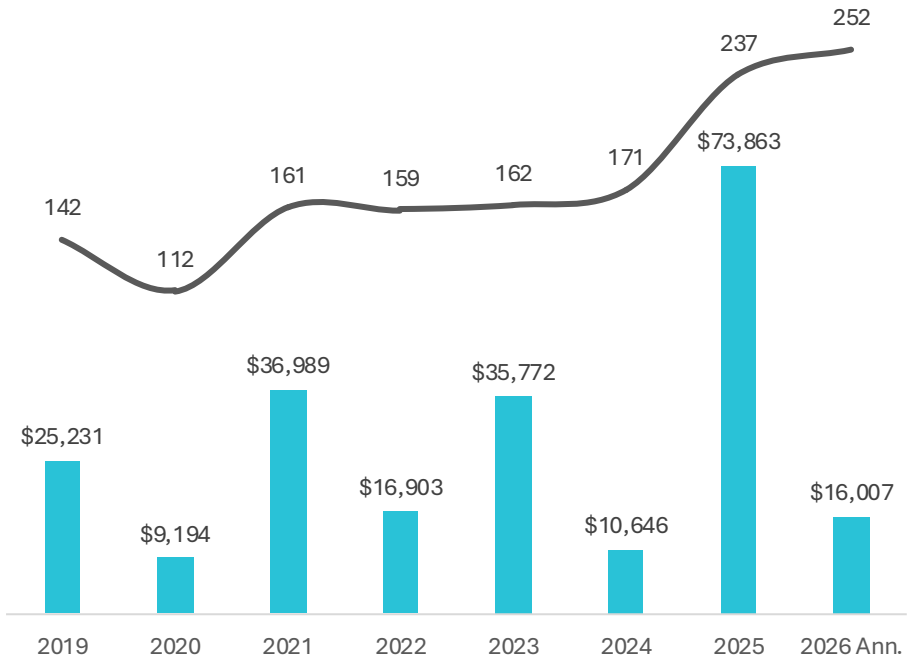

Total Deal Activity By Quarter

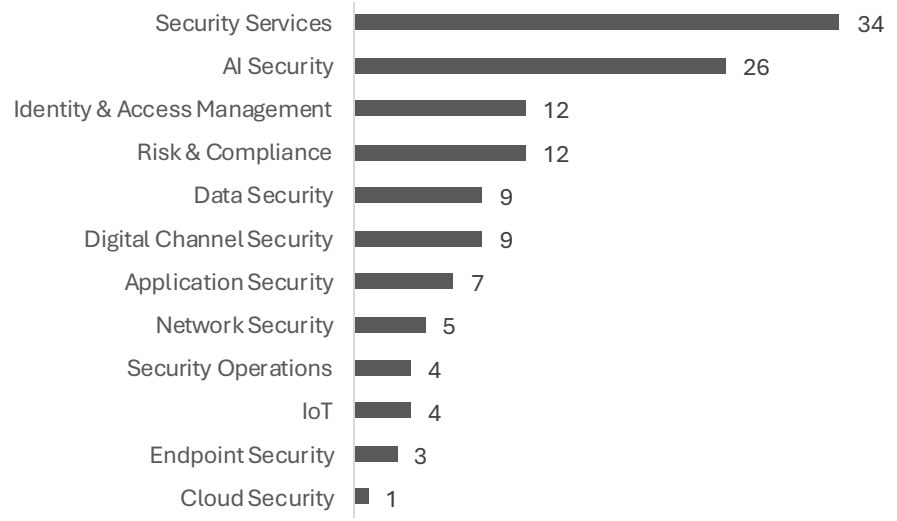

Strategic M&A Activity (2019-2026)

Strategic M&A is on pace to exceed $16 billion in disclosed deal value in 2026. Security Services continues to lead strategic acquisition activity, accounting for 27% of all announced strategic transactions.

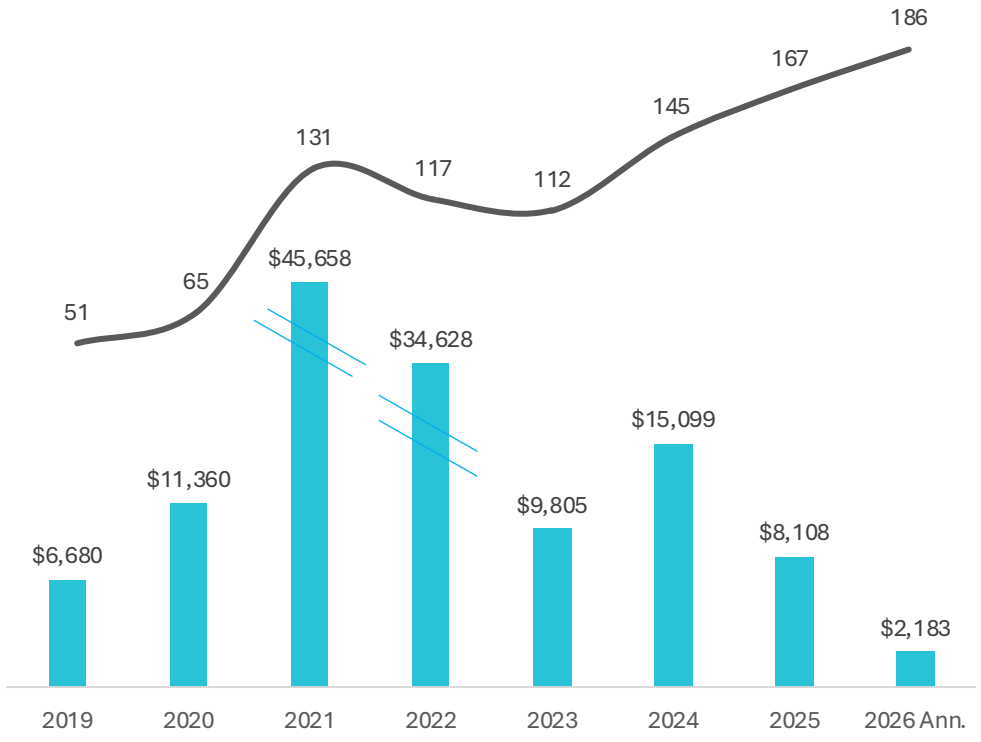

Strategic Activity 2026 Only

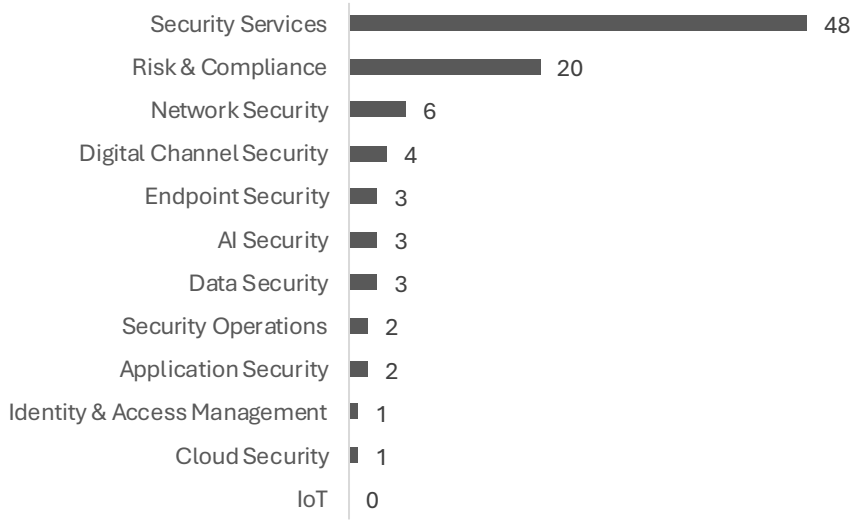

PE M&A Activity

Private equity-backed M&A has remained more selective in 2026, with Security Services accounting for the largest share of activity. Although the market is expected to remain well below strategic M&A, disclosed PE-backed deal value is still on pace to approach $2 billion by year-end.

PE Activity 2026 Only

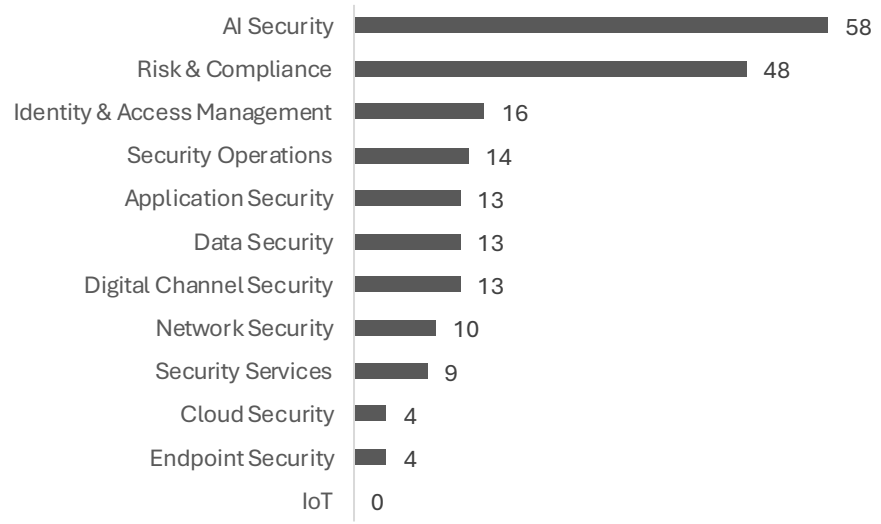

Early-Stage Financing Activity

2026 has gotten off to a strong start and is on pace to set a new record for early-stage cybersecurity financing. Investor appetite has been driven by continued momentum in AI Security and Risk & Compliance, where startups are attracting significant early-stage capital.

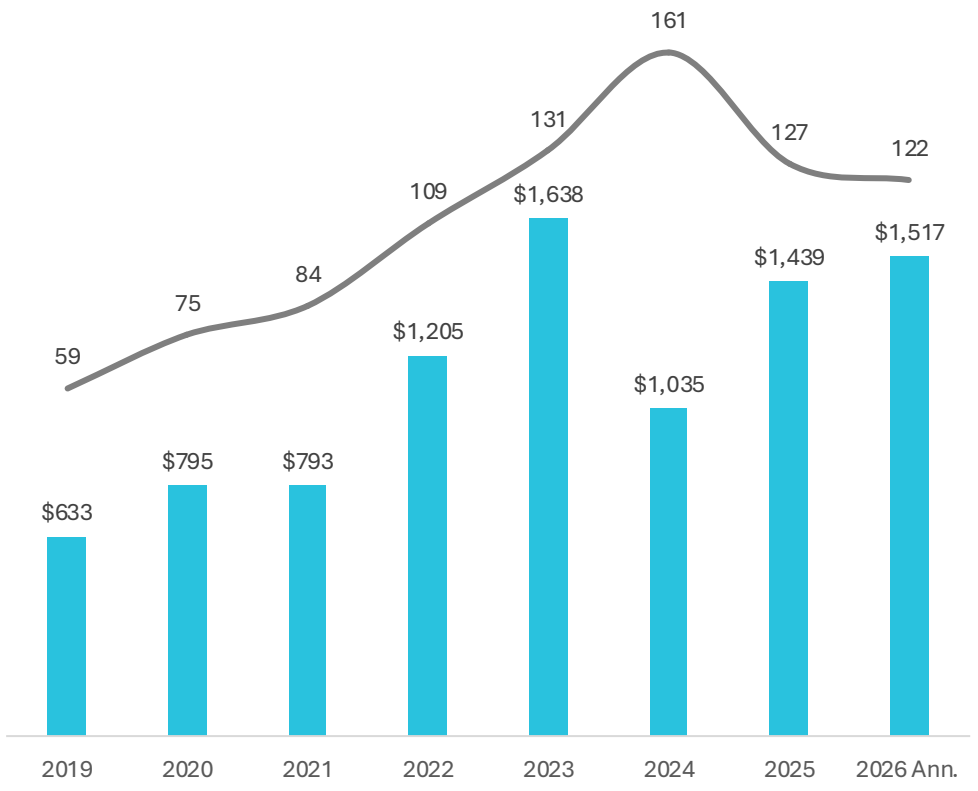

Early-Stage Activity 2026 Only

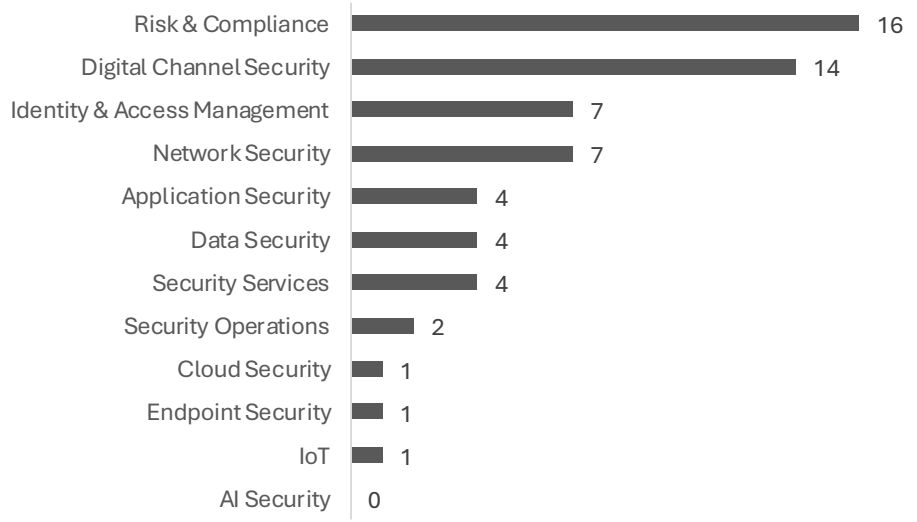

Later Stage Financing Activity

Later-stage financing is projected to have a great year with both the quantity and value of deals in the space. This motion is led by Risk & Compliance along with Digital Channel Security

Later Stage Activity 2026 Only

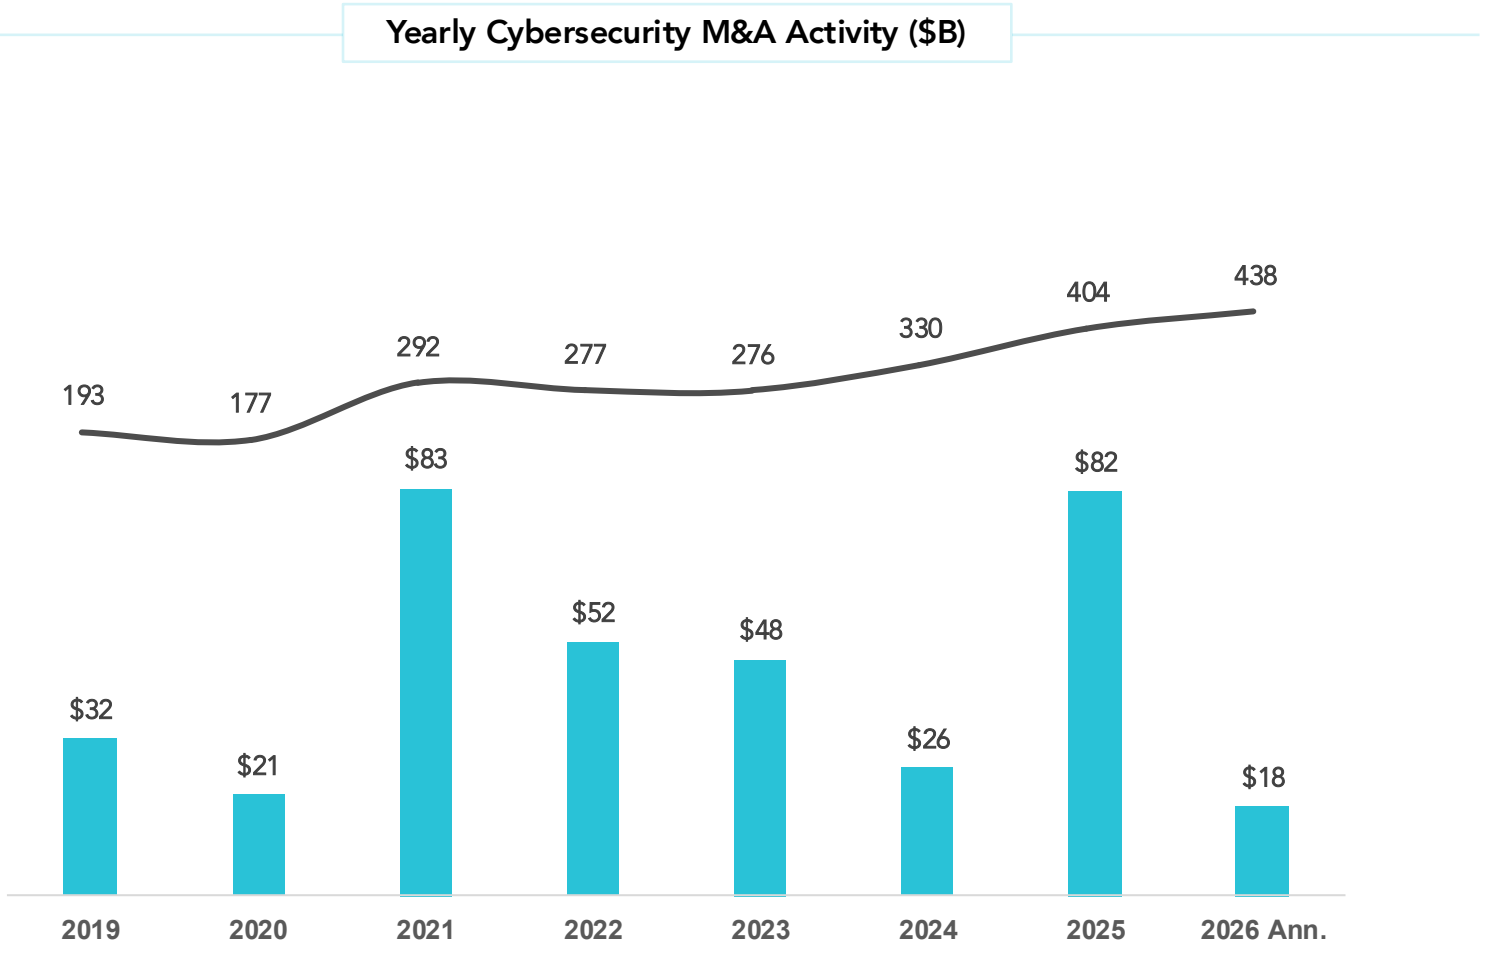

III. M&A Activity

Momentum RESEARCH

Annual Cybersecurity M&A

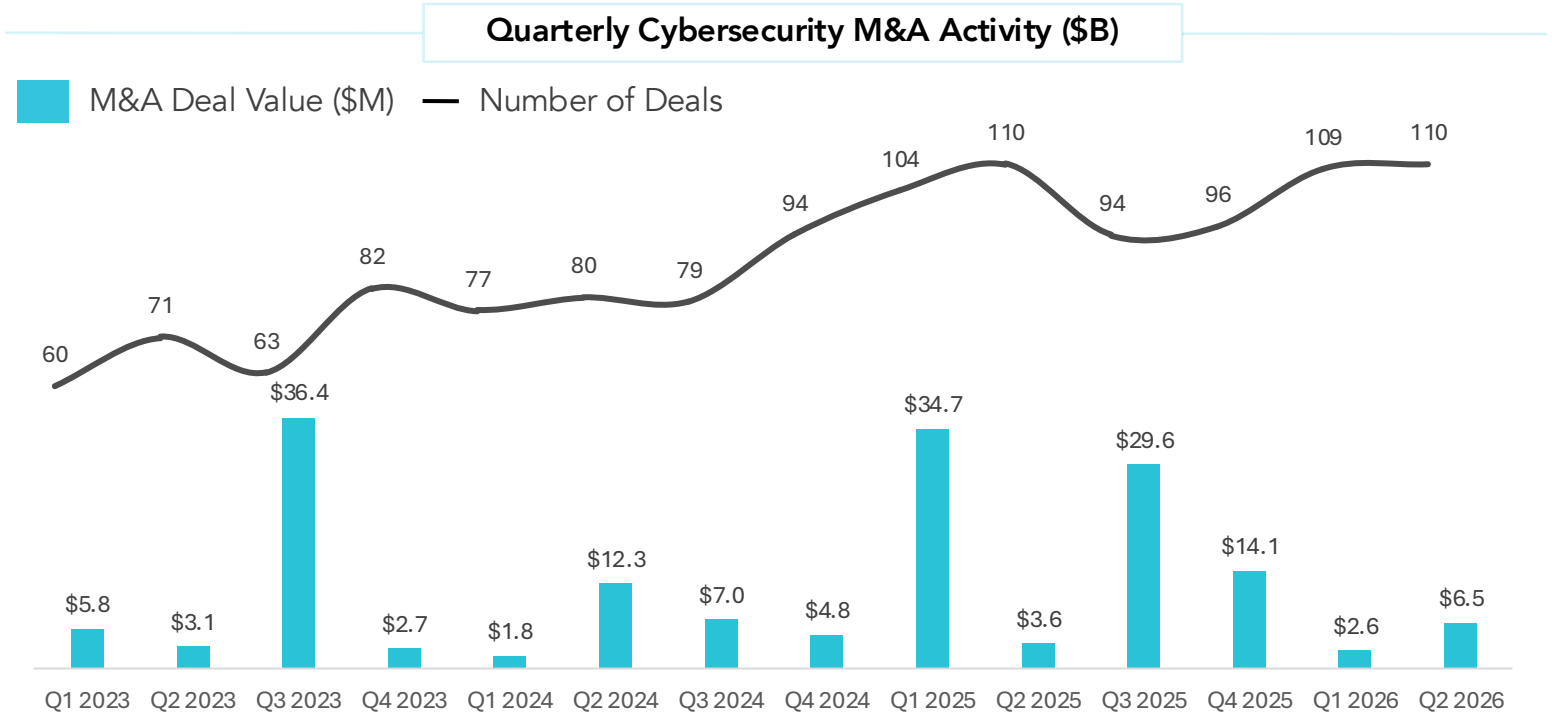

Cybersecurity M&A has steadily grown over the past seven years, and 2026 is expected to continue that trend. The market is on pace to reach a record 438 announced transactions, underscoring continued buyer appetite despite a more selective capital deployment environment. While deal volume is expected to reach an all-time high, aggregate disclosed deal value is projected to total approximately $18 billion—the lowest level of the past seven years—reflecting a market characterized by smaller, strategic acquisitions rather than blockbuster transactions.

2026 has also been described as the "Year of the Land Grab," as established cybersecurity leaders race to expand their AI capabilities and strengthen platform offerings through acquisition. Strategic buyers including Accenture, CrowdStrike, and Palo Alto Networks have all completed AI-focused acquisitions this year, reinforcing the industry's shift toward platform expansion and consolidation. The recent acquisitions of Dragos, NetRise, and RunZero, totaling more than $4 billion in disclosed value, exemplify this trend as buyers prioritize technologies that enhance cyber resilience, operational efficiency, and AI-driven security capabilities.

Quarterly Cybersecurity M&A

While 2026 has yet to distinguish itself in terms of aggregate deal value, transaction activity remains exceptionally strong. Q1 and Q2 each recorded over 100 announced cybersecurity M&A transactions, continuing the steady year-over-year increase in deal volume and reinforcing sustained strategic demand across the sector.

Monthly Cybersecurity M&A

2026 has featured a more balanced distribution of M&A activity throughout the year. Unlike 2025, when several mega-deals drove sharp spikes in monthly deal value—particularly in March and July—2026 has seen steadier transaction activity with fewer outsized deals.

The absence of blockbuster transactions has kept aggregate deal value below recent highs. Instead, the market has been defined by a high volume of smaller, strategic "land grab" acquisitions as buyers expand capabilities, strengthen platforms, and position themselves for the next phase of cybersecurity growth.

Cybersecurity M&A By Segment

As H1 2026 came to a close, several distinct trends emerged across the cybersecurity M&A market. Security Services separated itself from every other sector by deal count, reflecting sustained demand for cyber expertise, managed services, and consulting capabilities as enterprises accelerate AI adoption and navigate an increasingly complex threat landscape.

While AI Security remained one of the market's most active strategic themes, Network Security told a different story. Deal volume was relatively modest, but transaction value was disproportionately high, driven by Accenture's $4.2 billion acquisition of Dragos alongside Netrise and RunZero. The sector demonstrated that a handful of large-scale strategic platform acquisitions can outweigh broad-based deal activity, highlighting continued buyer conviction around critical infrastructure, attack surface visibility, and next-generation network resilience.

Segmented M&A Activity ($M)

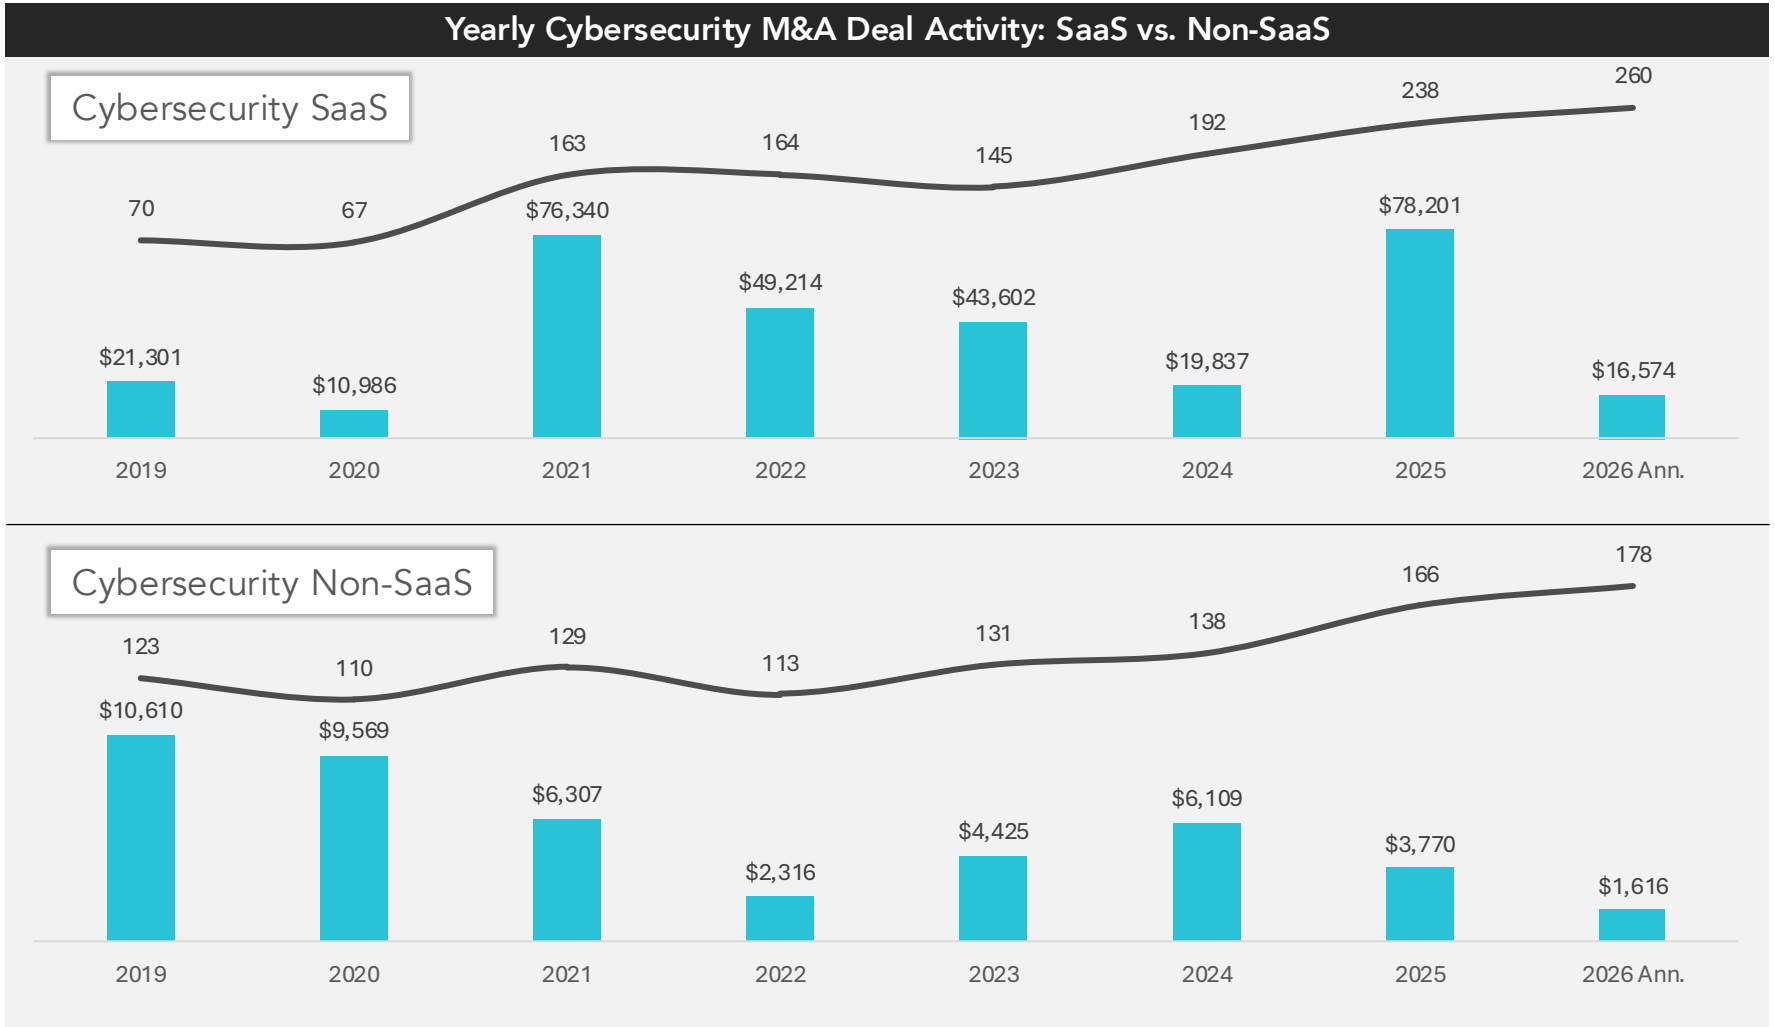

Non-SaaS vs. SaaS Cybersecurity M&A

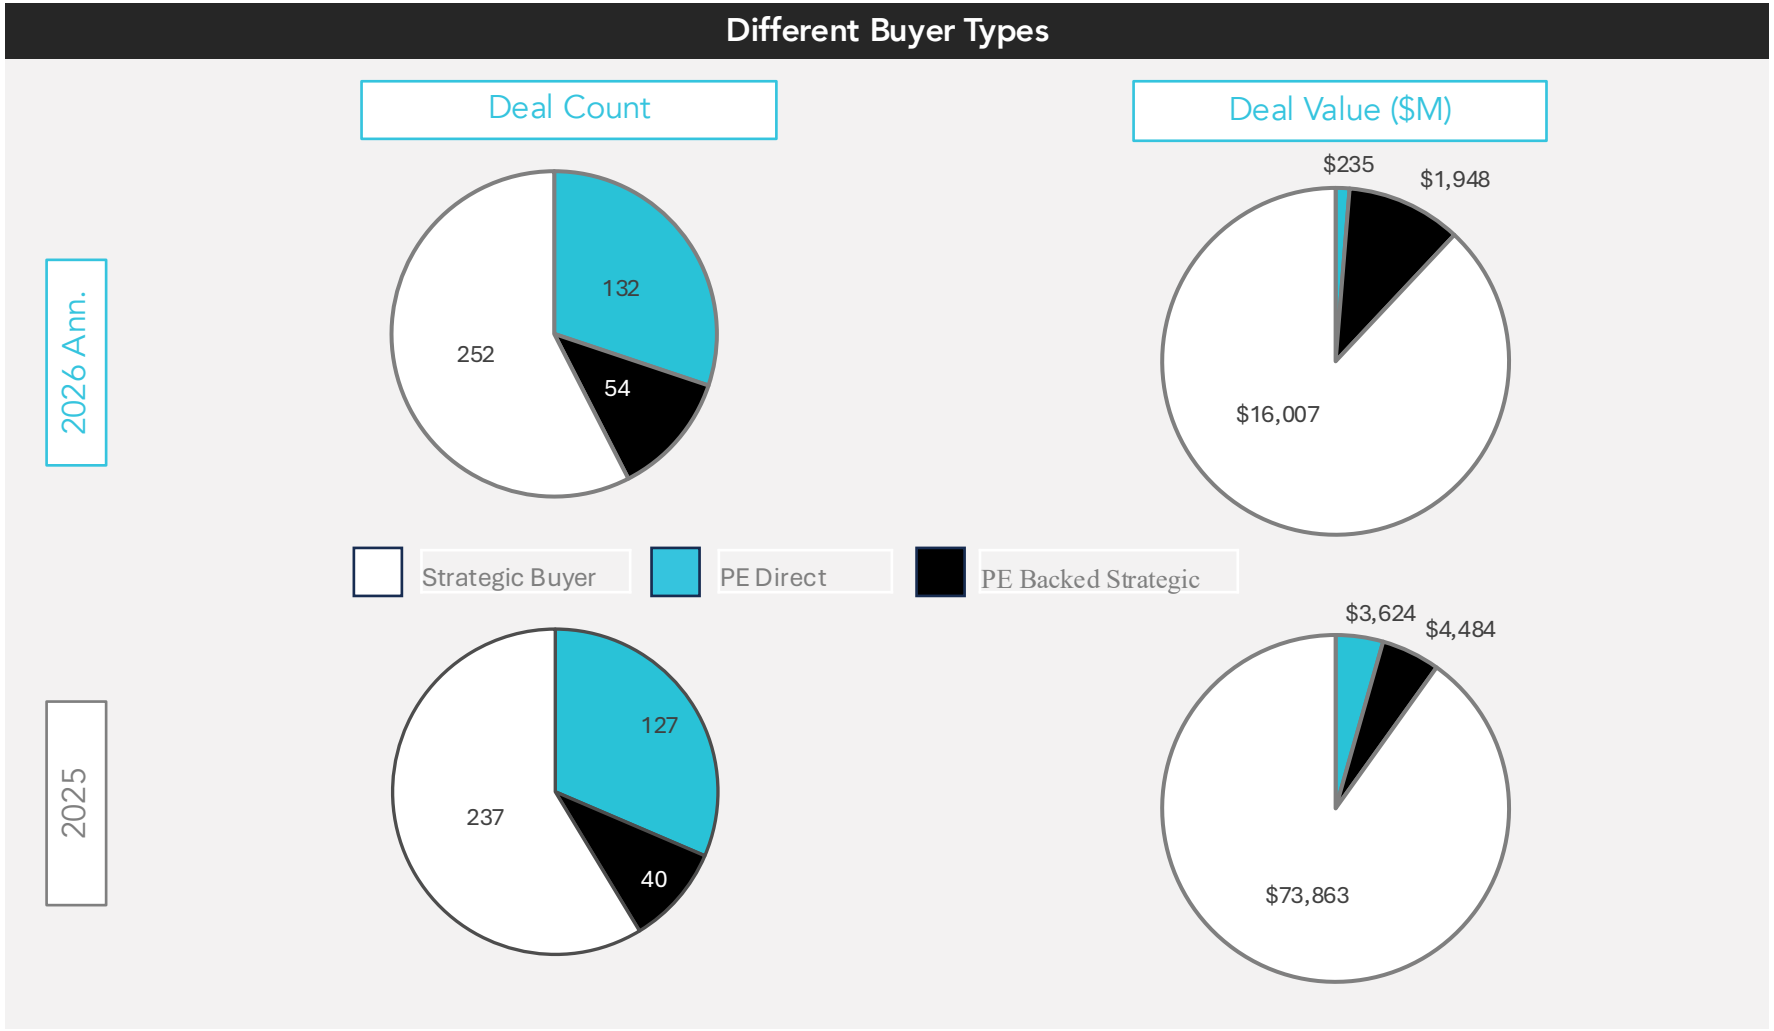

H1 2026 reinforced the market's preference for SaaS-based cybersecurity businesses. By year-end, SaaS transactions are on pace to account for more than $16 billion of deployed capital, reflecting continued buyer demand for recurring revenue, scalable platforms, and cloud-native security solutions.

At the same time, non-SaaS businesses remained highly active. More than 175 transactions were announced through H1, generating over $1 billion in aggregate deal value. While generally smaller in size, these transactions underscore sustained strategic interest in services, hardware, and other cybersecurity capabilities that complement broader platform strategies.

Cybersecurity M&A Buyers

With the "Year of the Land Grab" in full effect, strategic acquirers continued to drive cybersecurity M&A throughout H1 2026. Corporate buyers accounted for 57% of announced transactions, reflecting an ongoing focus on expanding platform capabilities, accelerating AI roadmaps, and filling product gaps through acquisition rather than internal development.

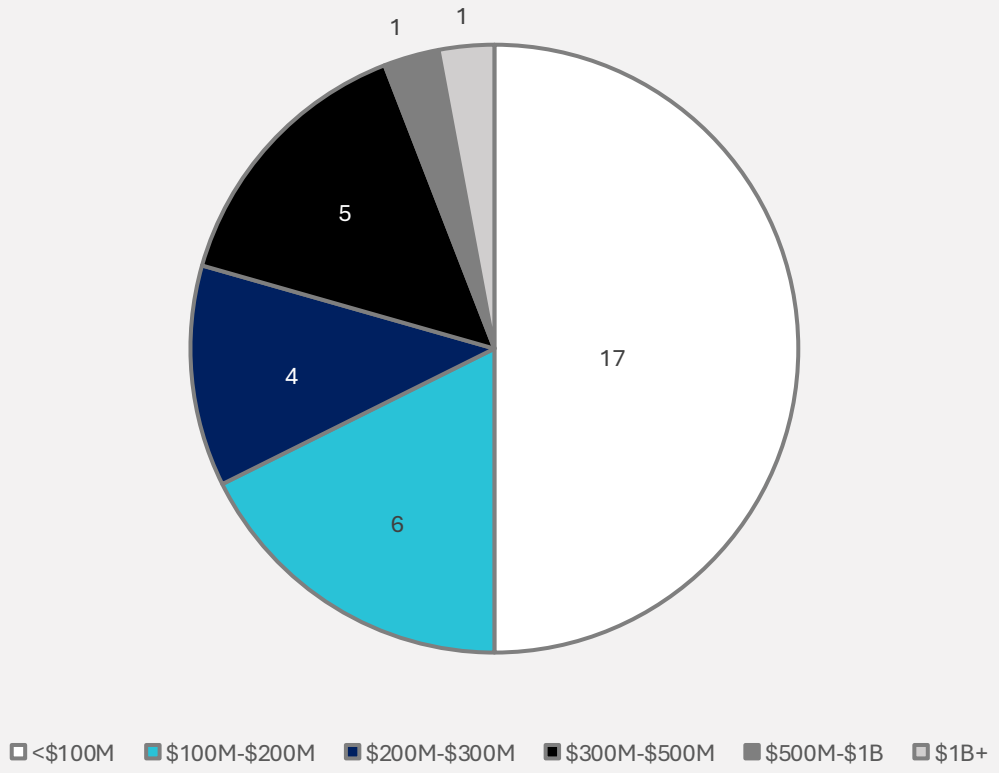

Cybersecurity M&A Deal Value Distribution

Megadeals were relatively scarce during H1 2026. The market produced just one disclosed transaction exceeding $1 billion—Accenture's acquisition of Dragos—and one transaction above $500 million with CrowdStrike's acquisition of SGNL. Most other disclosed transactions fell in the $50 million to $400 thousand range, reflecting a market characterized by a high volume of strategic tuck-in acquisitions rather than transformational deals.

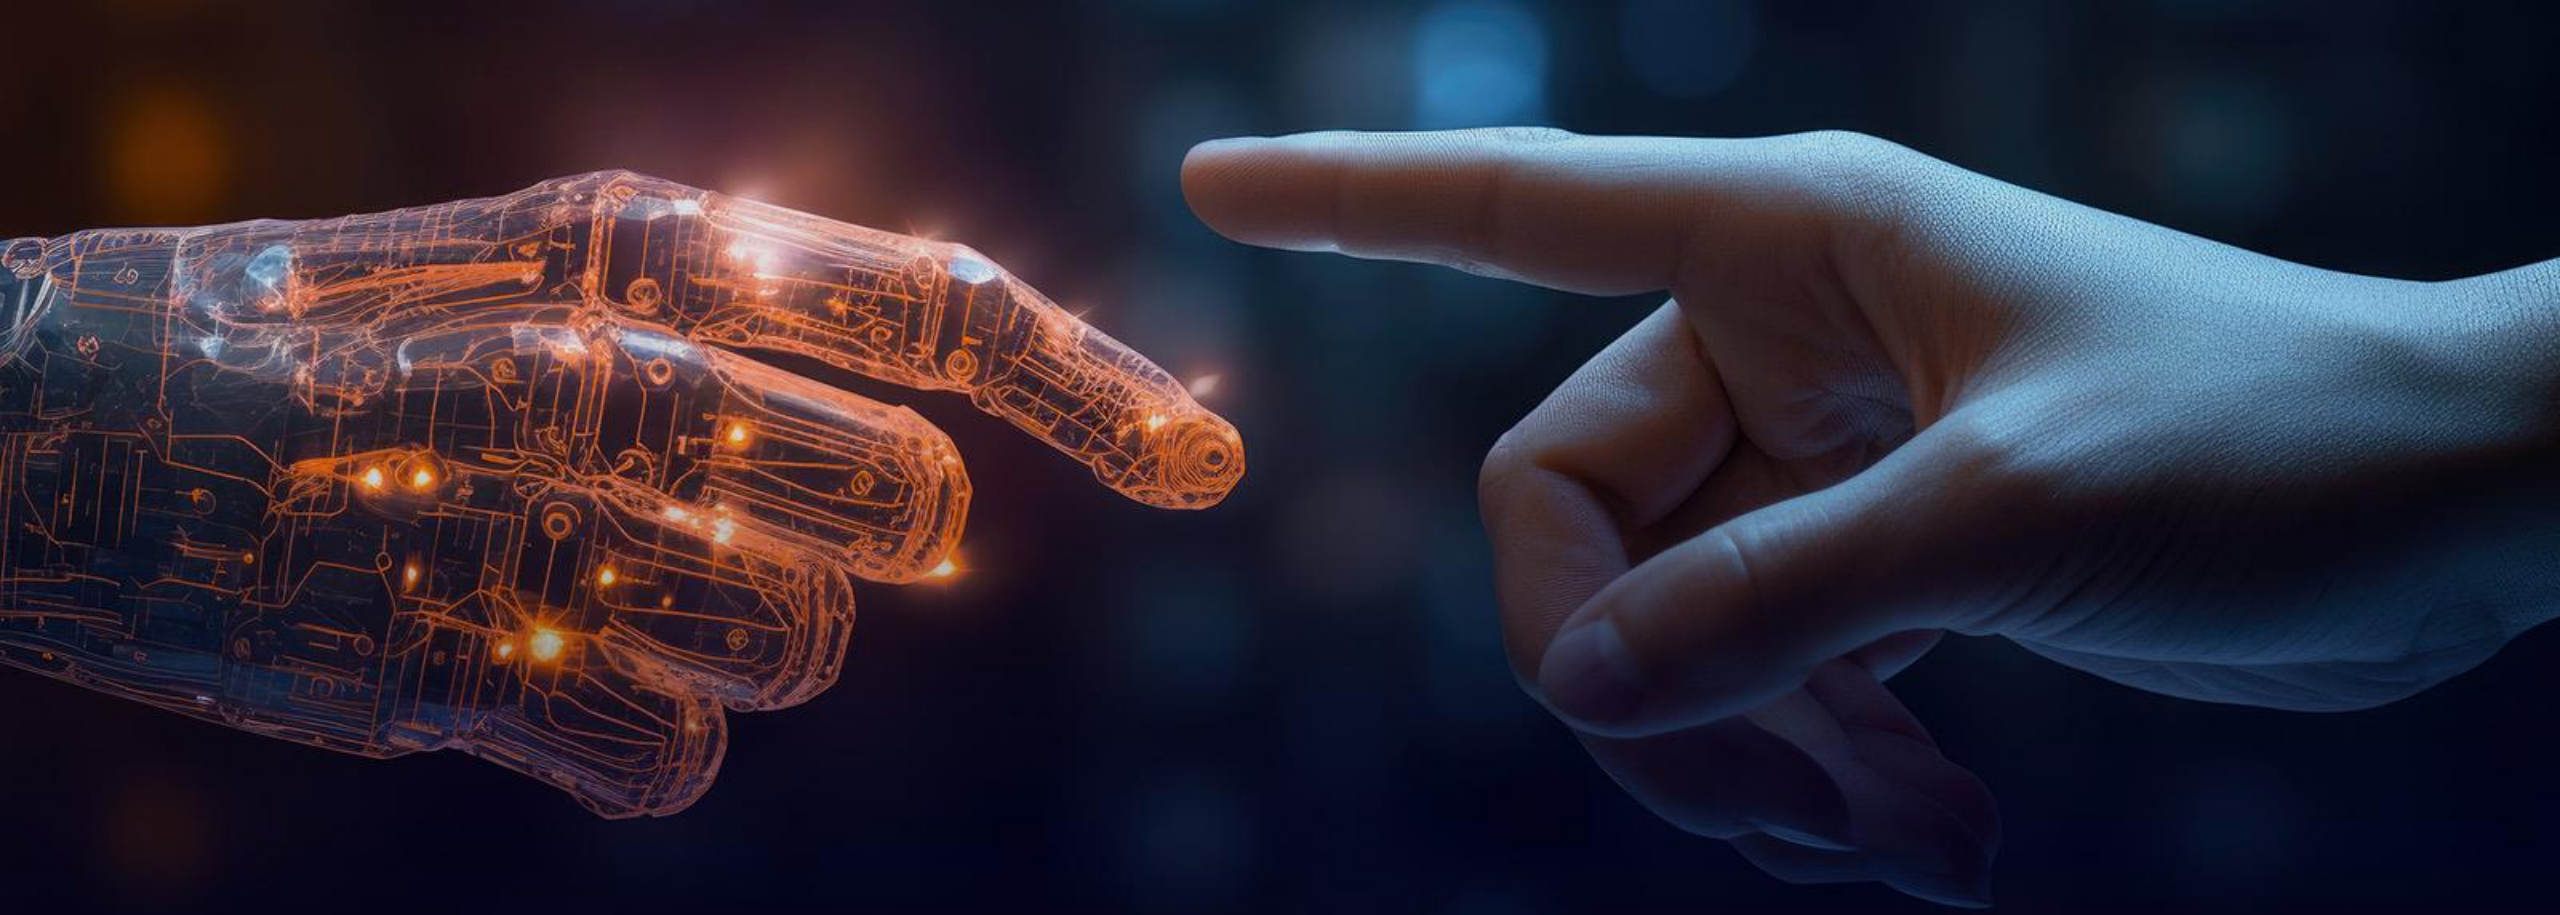

Momentum accelerated early in the second half of the year as July delivered the market's second $1 billion-plus transaction with Cyera's acquisition of Oasis Security, signaling that larger platform-defining acquisitions continue to emerge as strategic buyers pursue category leadership.

IV. Financing Activity

Momentum RESEARCH

Cybersecurity Financing Trends

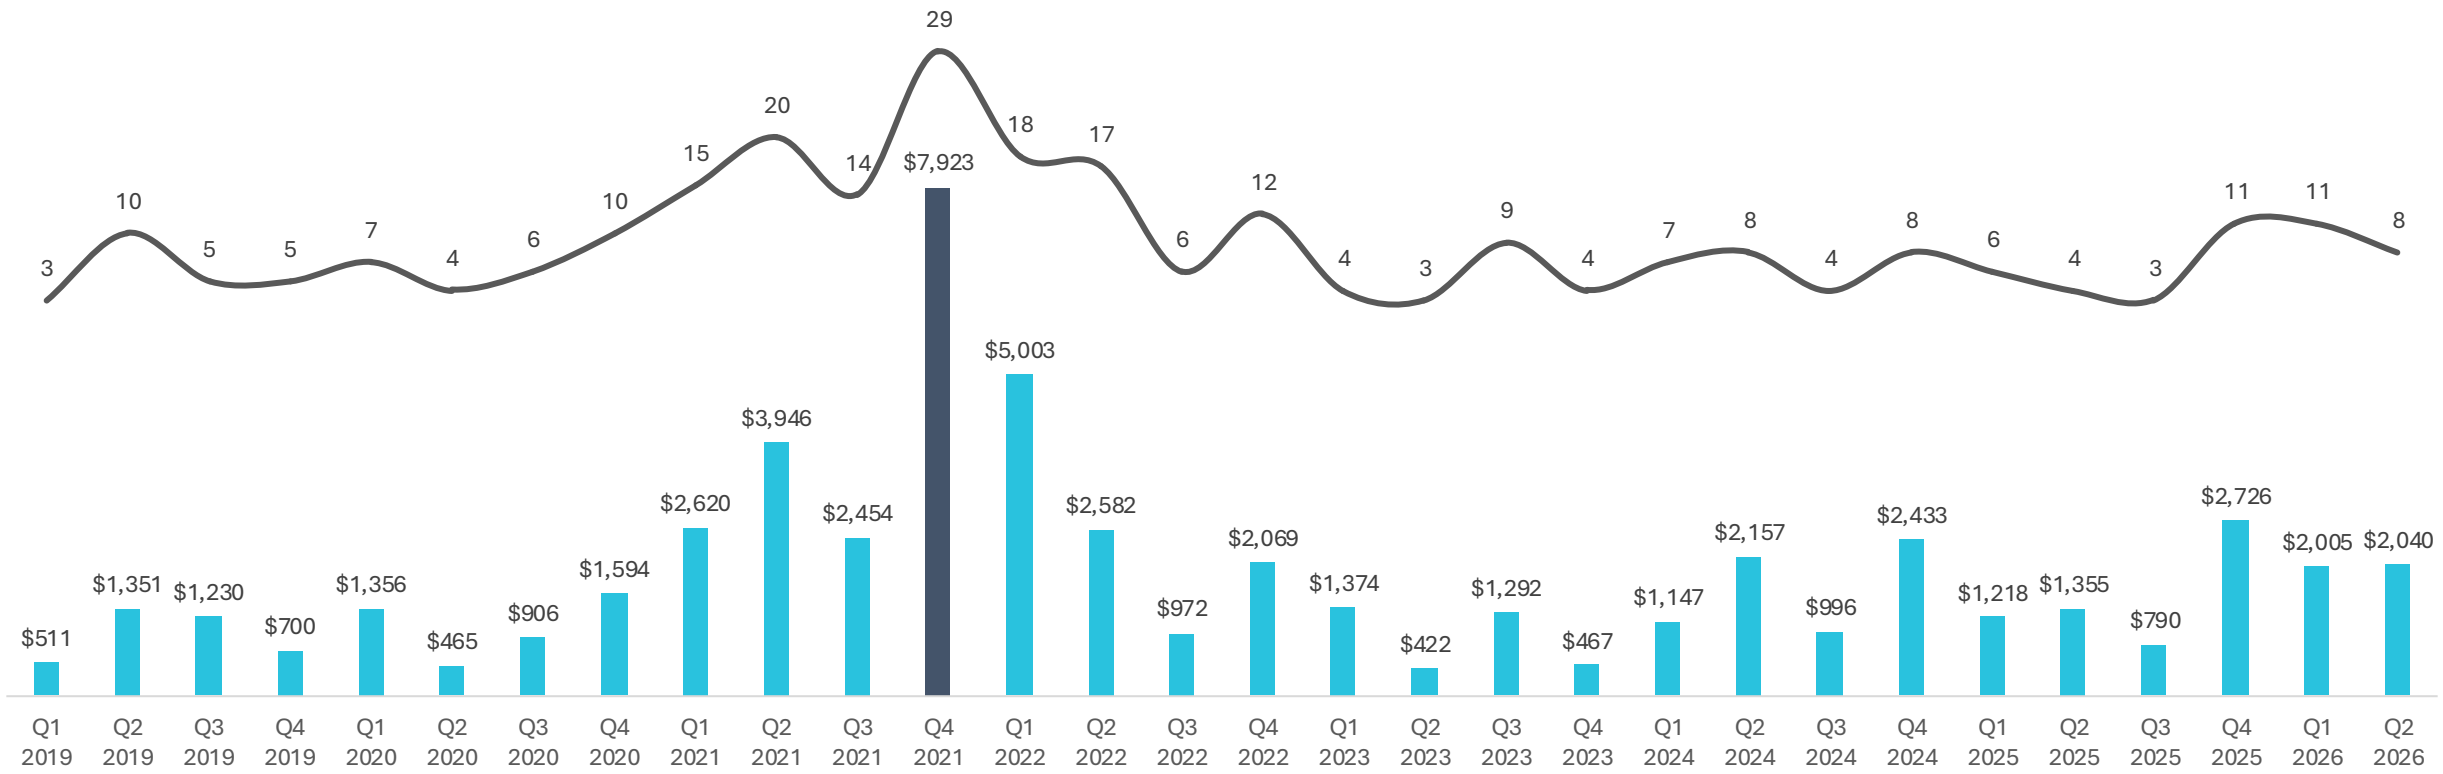

H1 2026 financing activity remained in line with recent market trends, with more than $7 billion of capital deployed through the first half of the year. At the current pace, 2026 is on track to be another strong year for cybersecurity funding, led by continued investment in AI Security and Security Services as investors back the next generation of market leaders.

While financing volumes have remained healthy, slower deal counts have tempered aggregate capital raised through H1. July, however, marked a notable acceleration, with more than 50 financing rounds announced, including several transactions exceeding $100 million. Should that momentum persist through the second half, 2026 has the potential to finish as an above-average year for cybersecurity venture funding.

Quarterly Cybersecurity Financing

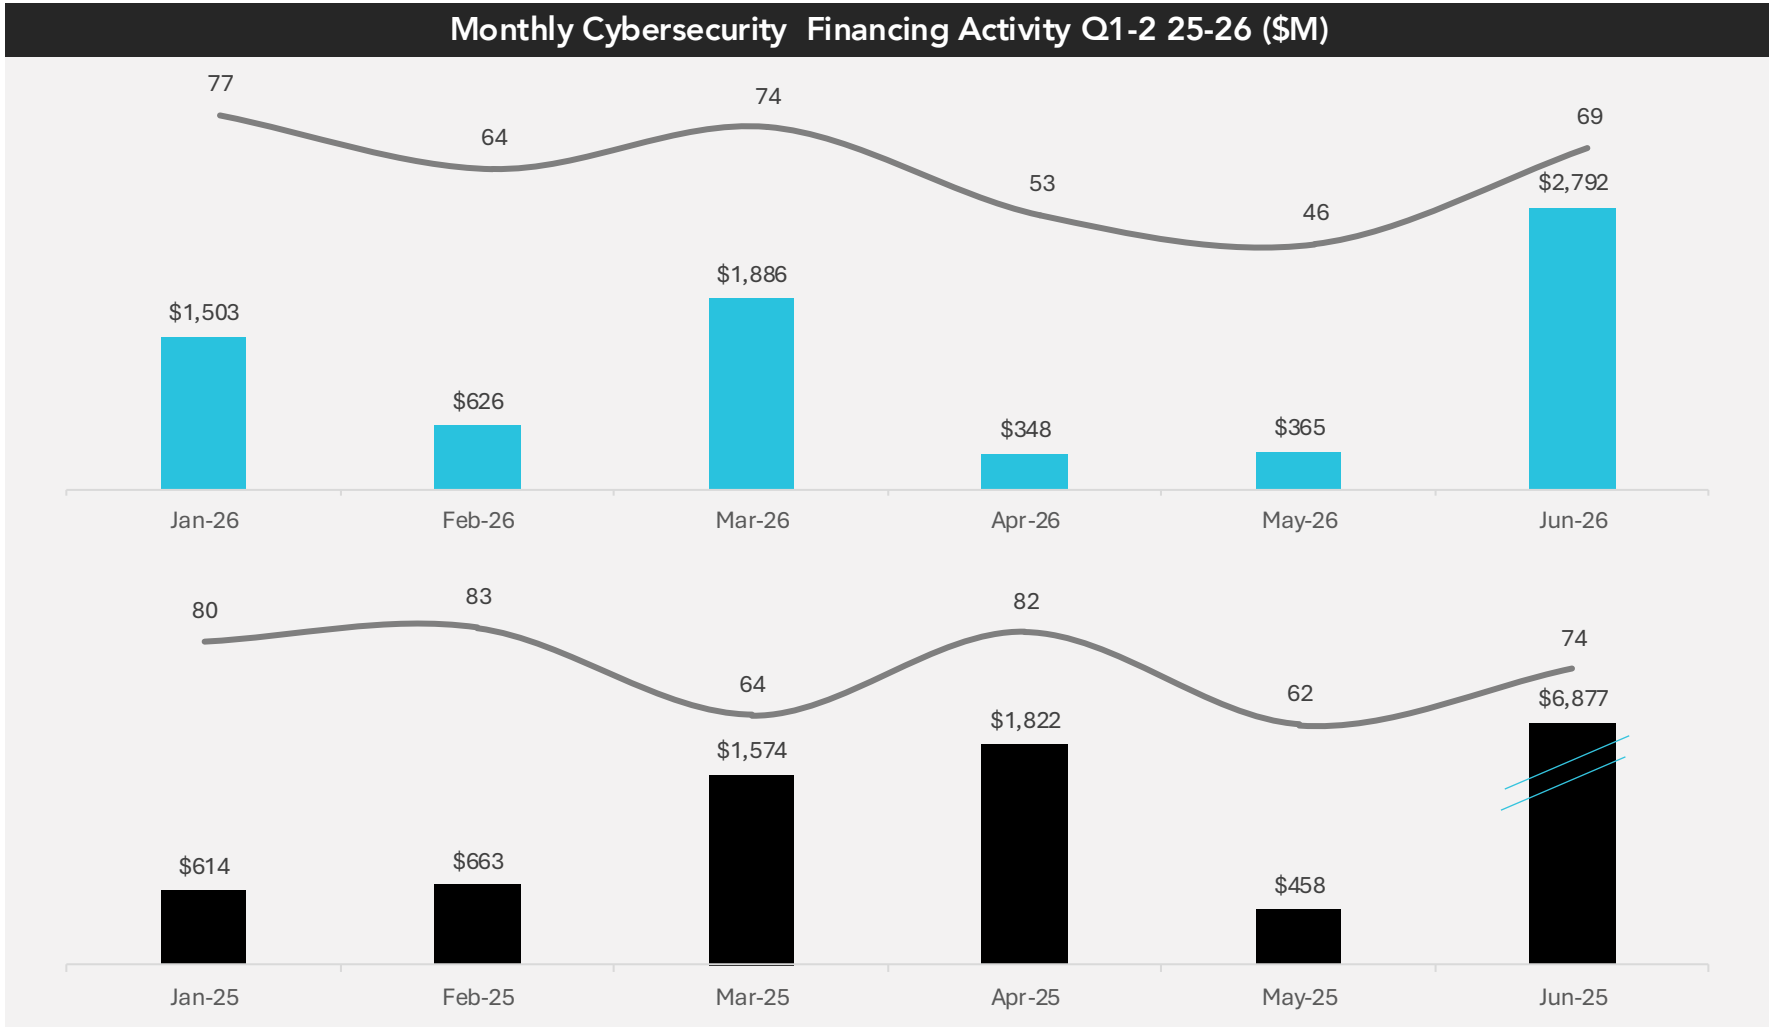

Financing Deals Over 100M Not Classified as Debt

Monthly Cybersecurity Financing

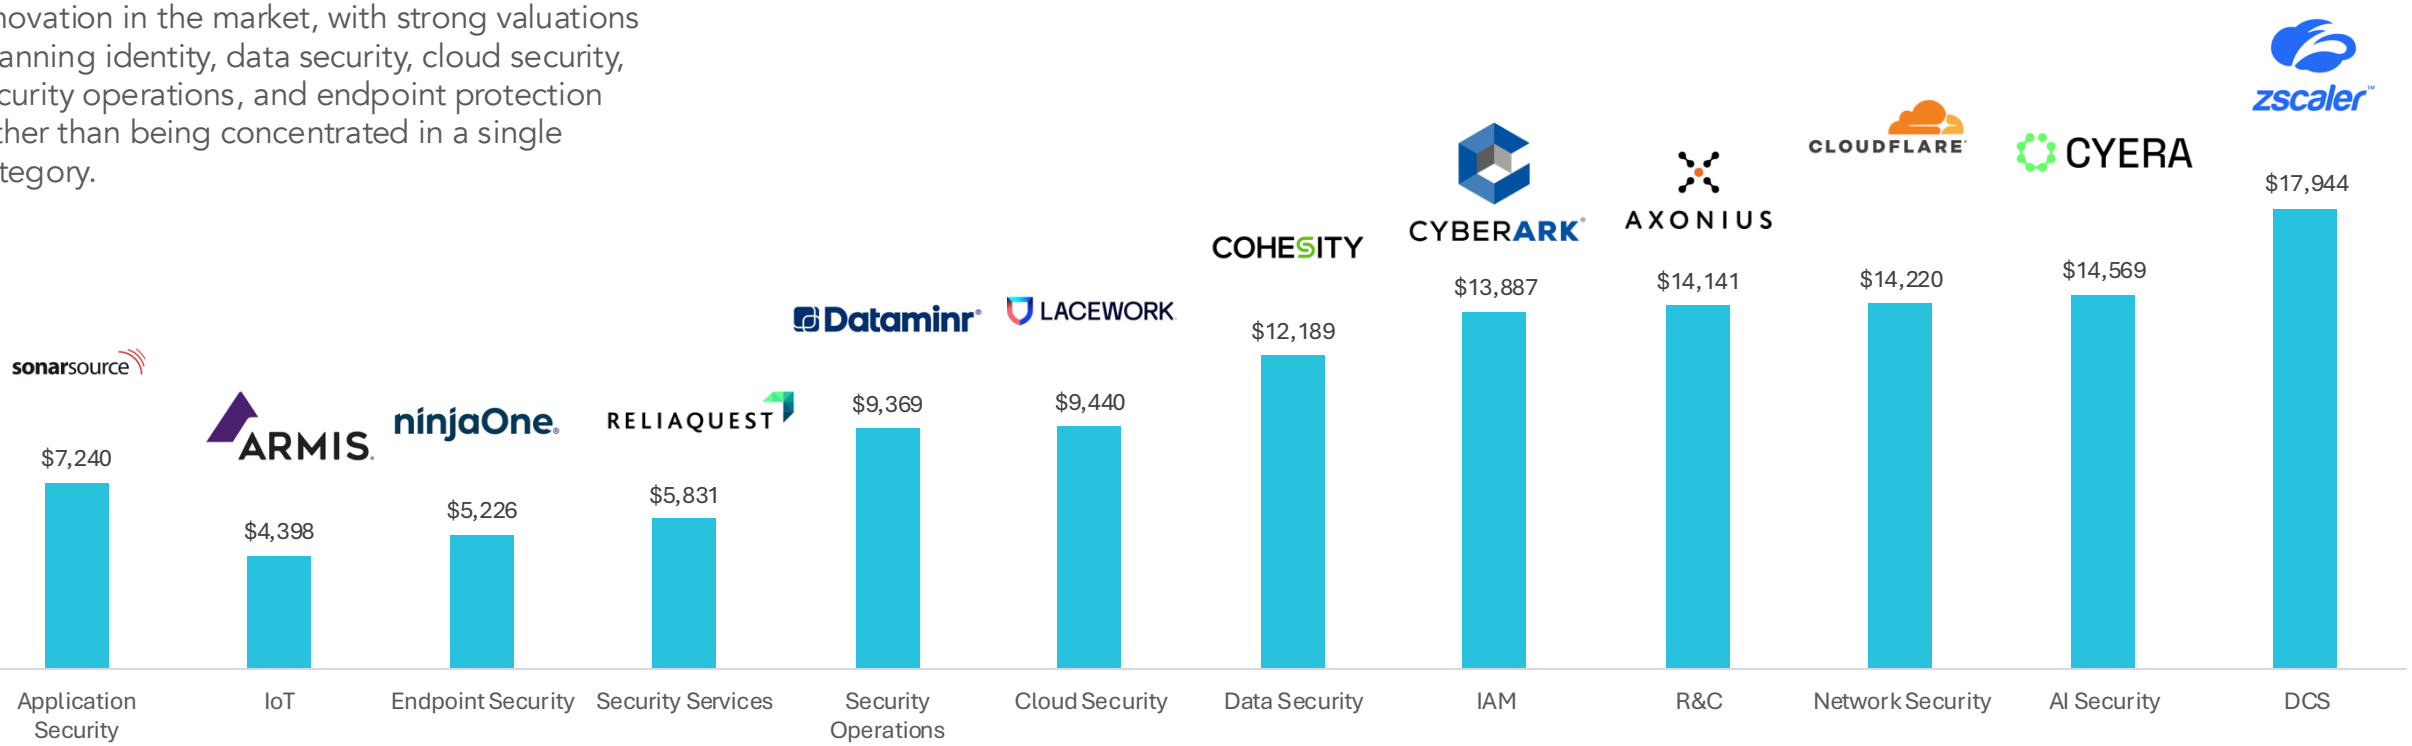

2026 has seen a more even distribution of M&A activity on a month-to-month basis. Unlike 2025, when several mega-deals drove sharp spikes in monthly deal value—particularly in March and July—2026 has been characterized by steady transaction activity throughout the year.

The absence of blockbuster transactions has kept aggregate deal value below recent highs. Instead, the market has been defined by a high volume of smaller, strategic "land grab" acquisitions as buyers expand capabilities, fill product gaps, and strengthen their competitive positioning.

Cybersecurity Financing By Sector 2019-2026

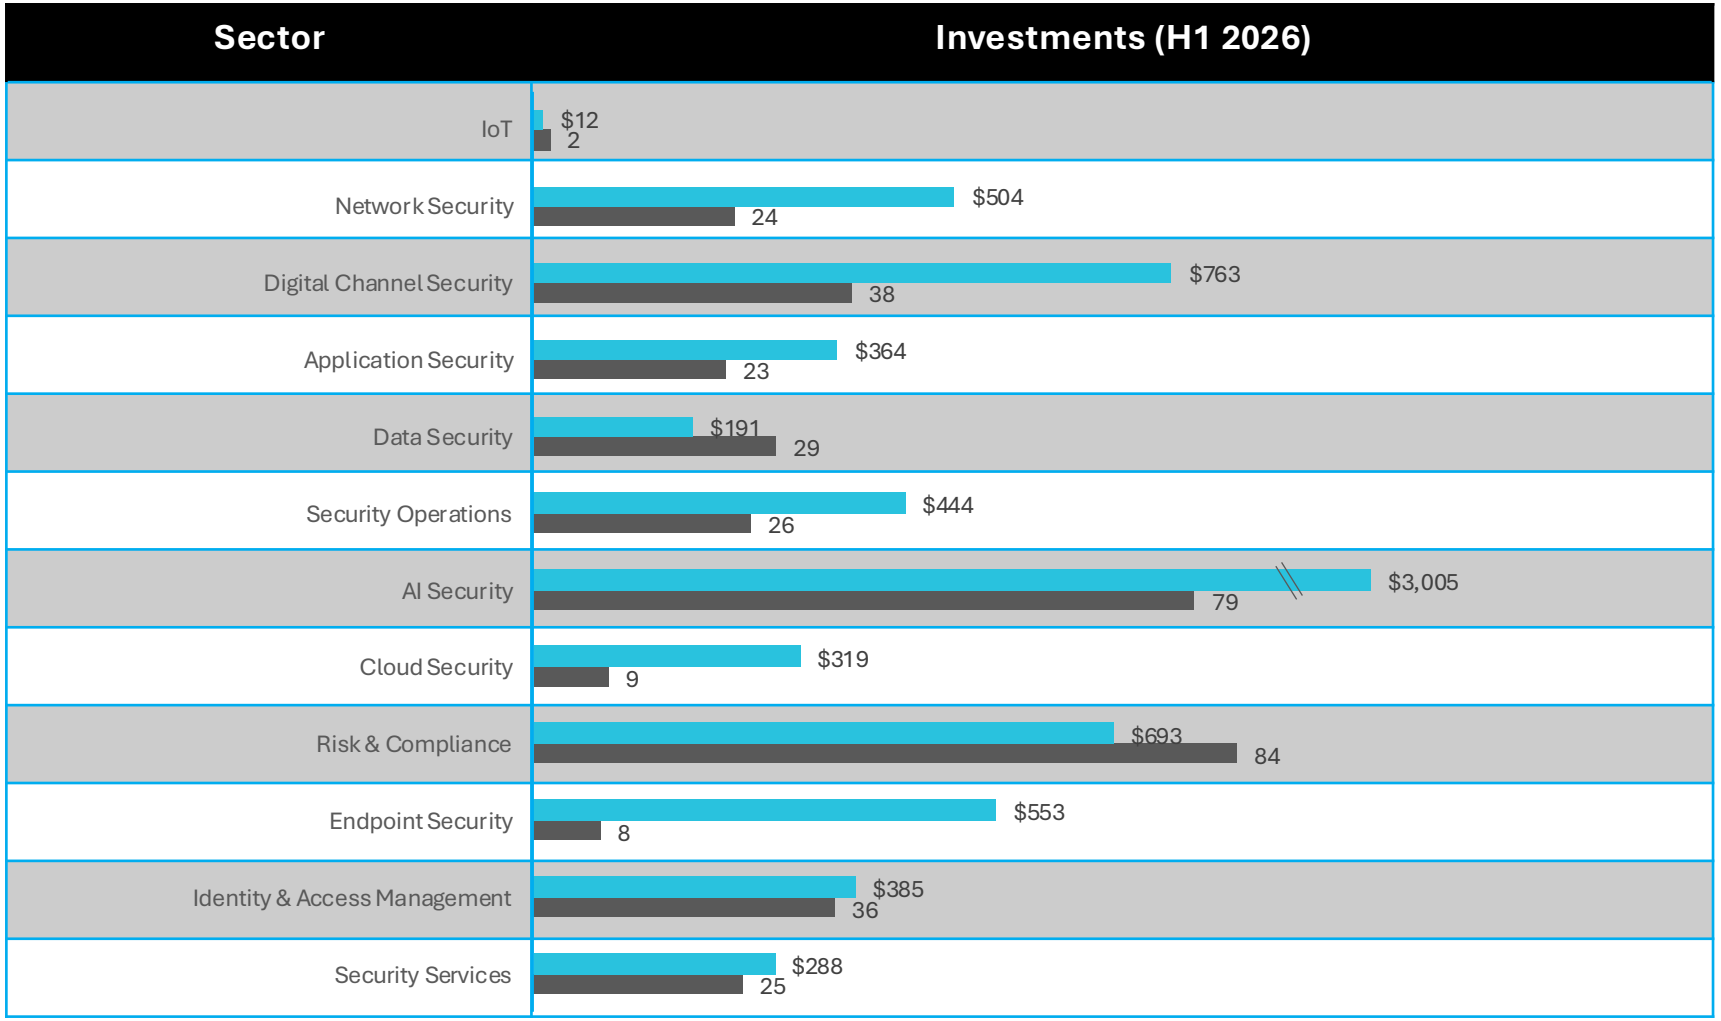

Digital Channel Security remains home to the highest-valued private cybersecurity company, with Zscaler leading the sector at nearly $18B, while AI Security and Network Security also feature highly valued market leaders such as Cyera and Cloudflare. The distribution of top private companies across nearly every cybersecurity sector highlights the breadth of innovation in the market, with strong valuations spanning identity, data security, cloud security, security operations, and endpoint protection rather than being concentrated in a single category.

AI Security overwhelmingly leads investment activity, attracting more than $3.0B in funding—over four times the next closest sector—highlighting continued investor conviction around securing AI models, applications, and infrastructure. Risk & Compliance ranks second by total capital deployed and leads all sectors in deal count, reflecting sustained demand for governance, compliance, and cyber risk management solutions.

Outside of AI Security, investment activity remains well distributed across the market. Digital Channel Security, Endpoint Security, Network Security, and Security Operations each attracted hundreds of millions of dollars in funding, while Identity & Access Management and Security Services maintained healthy financing activity. This broad distribution demonstrates that investor interest extends beyond AI, supporting innovation across nearly every segment of the cybersecurity ecosystem.

Cybersecurity Financing Buyer Distribution

The financing landscape has shifted in 2026 toward earlier-stage capital deployment. Series A, Series B, Series C, and other early-stage financings account for the majority of disclosed deal value, a notable change from 2025, when debt financings and later-stage rounds represented a larger share of the market. Early-stage transactions now comprise just over 50% of all announced funding rounds, highlighting continued investor conviction in the next generation of cybersecurity companies.
